

EARTH-SUN-MOON SYSTEM: PHASES OF THE MOON

Read the text below, and then answer the questions that follow.

Have you ever looked up at the night sky and admired the glowing moon? Have you ever wondered why its shape changes? The moon does not produce its own light, despite its shiny appearance in the sky. Instead, the moon is lit up by the sun. The part of the moon that is both sunlit and facing Earth is called the moon's phase. The moon's phase changes as it orbits the Earth.

The model to the right shows where sunlight hits the moon at eight different positions in its orbit. To use the model, pick one of the eight positions. Pretend you are standing on Earth and looking up at the moon from the base of the dotted line. From this perspective, what would you see in the sky?

It's worth noting that this model is created from the perspective of the Northern Hemisphere. If you are in the Southern Hemisphere, the moon will appear flipped, left to right.

Each position in the model above corresponds to one of the moon phases pictured below. Each phase has a unique name.
