Why Study Evolution?

Major Concepts of Evolution

Evolution: the change in the heritable characteristics of biological populations over successive generations. Evolutionary processes include natural selection, genetic drift, mutation, gene flow, and genetic recombination. Evolutionary biology is the study of the processes that lead to the formation of new species and the extinction of old ones.

Evolutionary Biology: the study of the processes that lead to the formation of new species and the extinction of old ones. It includes the study of the genetic and developmental mechanisms that underlie the evolution of organisms and the study of the fossil record.

Evolutionary Systematics: the study of the evolutionary relationships between organisms. It involves the classification of organisms based on their evolutionary relationships and the study of the processes that lead to the formation of new species.
