- For each pedigree, write the genotypes of the individuals

The phenylketonuria in the pedigree is a single gene autosomal recessive trait that is inherited differently than affects the body's ability to produce this protein. It also causes other distinctive effects at early's ages.

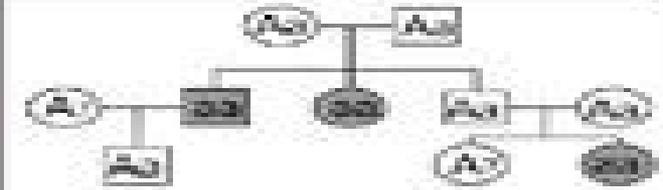

1. What is the inheritance pattern for this gene?
 a) autosomal dominant b) autosomal recessive

Marfan syndrome can affect the connective tissue and causes the individual to have long, thin arms, legs, fingers and toes.

5. What is the inheritance pattern for this? autosomal dominant
 6. Provide an ideal's case genetic notation for the gene. The first two parents both had marfan syndrome, so at least one of them must have the disease.
 7. Give other the genetic notation "A, a" - you will give a genotype of these individuals to have children with the disease with the gene by itself. (unlike with the cystic fibrosis case) as recessive, because the disorder is dominant, it is easy to see family case with all "normal" that is a good time to discuss when the first individual got the disease, likely it was an environmental or inheritance the gene.

Albinism is a genetic trait that is inherited recessive that is a lack of pigmentation of the skin, hair, and eyes. It is a single gene autosomal recessive trait that affects the body's ability to produce and deposit melanin in various parts of the body.

8. What is the inheritance pattern for this? x-linked recessive
 9. Provide an ideal's case genetic notation for the gene. The disease always affect to female, though it appears to have it if her father had it and her mother was a carrier.
 10. The first two are in parents is possible and is that the probability chance for parents would result with a girl? Since the child with one of the parents (the female has carrier) is female has a 50% chance of having the disorder. A male child will have a 0% chance of inheriting the allele from her heterozygous mother.

Epistasis is a process that affects the ability of pairs of genes to work together to give the trait phenotype. The disease must be fixed up in the things resulting in epistasis problem.

11. What is the inheritance pattern for this? autosomal recessive
 12. Provide an ideal's case genetic notation for the gene. That please that the cell have the disease must be shown in order to have an individual with the disease.
