

Mastitis in the NICU

If you have been diagnosed with mastitis, an inflammation in the breast that occurs in mothers who are breastfeeding or pumping milk, management guidelines for NICU mothers are different from those for non-NICU mothers.

Mastitis doesn't always mean that the milk from the affected breast has unsafe germs (bacteria) in it. However, we are extra cautious in the NICU because NICU babies are more prone to infections than full-term babies living at home.

I have heard that mothers can continue breastfeeding with mastitis. Is this different with a NICU baby?

- All mothers' milk has a mixture of bacteria that are passed to the baby and play an important role in keeping him or her healthy throughout life. During mastitis, these same bacteria get out of balance and can bring on symptoms of pain, redness, swelling and fever. These symptoms mean that bacteria in your milk from the breast with mastitis might not be safe for your baby.
- Mothers with healthy babies are advised to continue

- Tell your doctor that we recommend testing a sample of your breastmilk to be sure that the antibiotics kills the germs effectively.

What else do I need to know about mastitis with a NICU baby?

- You should feel better within 48 hours after starting antibiotics. If you still have a fever after 48 hours, contact both your doctor and the NICU lactation specialist immediately because you might need a different antibiotic.
