

Section A: Short Questions

Answers

- a. Nominal wage would be defined as the amount of money a person receives from work without factoring in the effects of inflation whereas real wage is the wage received when inflation is factored in.
- b. The HR department of a specific firm determines the nominal wage. It takes into account the salary in which competing firms are paying their employees and the unemployment rate of the economy before determining a suitable wage. For the real wage, the marketing department will then set the price of their product according to its demand. This price will then indicate how much of that product they can purchase with their nominal wage, this is known as the real wage.
- c. A decrease in nominal wage does imply a decrease in real wage because when there is a decrease in the wage that a worker gets to take home will lead to them having a lesser purchasing power than before.
- d. Frictional unemployment refers to when individuals are between jobs and are most likely to find a job quickly. Cyclical unemployment occurs due to changes in an economy whereby goods and services that were in demand in a certain period become out of demand and leave those people providing said goods/services out of work. Structural unemployment is a result of a mismatch between the skills offered by the workforce and the skills required by firms in the labour market. The most problematic in South Africa would be structural unemployment as there are lots of individuals who have degrees and skills that are not required by the economy.
- e. The strict definition of unemployment would only include those actively looking for work, whereas the broad definition would include those not actively looking for employment. The most quoted type of definition in media would be the broad definition.
- f. 30 individuals
- g. 170 individuals
- h. Strict definition =  $30/170 = 17.64\%$  Broad definition =  $60/200 = 30\%$
