Biology 164 Laboratory

Genetics and Chi-square ( $\chi^2$ ) Problem Set

Use the pedigree given below in the following situations:

- Individuals 5 and 14 in the third generation come to you and ask, "What is the probability that if we have a child, the child will be albino?"

The solution to this question has three parts. First, in order to have an albino child, parents having a normal phenotype must both be heterozygous. Thus, the probability of each parent being heterozygous must be calculated. Second, the probability of heterozygous parents producing an albino child must be calculated. Lastly, the probability of the parents producing an albino child will be the product of the three previously mentioned probabilities.

Since the sister of 5 is albino, we know that the parents of 5 are both heterozygotes. Thus we can calculate that the probability of 5 being a heterozygote is 2/3. (The probability is not 1/2 because we know by looking at the phenotype of 5 that he is not homozygous recessive.) The same reasoning applies to 14 because her brother is albino. The probability of two heterozygotes producing an albino is 1/4. Thus the probability of 5 and 14 producing an albino is

$$2/3 \times 2/3 \times 1/4 = 1/9$$

- Individuals 1 and 11 in the third generation come to you and ask, "What is the probability that if we have a child, the child will be albino?" Does the pedigree alone provide enough information for you to help this couple? Explain.

The general approach to here is similar to that of the first problem. The pedigree alone does not provide enough information to calculate a single probability because of insufficient information about the father of individual #1. However a range of probabilities can be calculated by making alternative assumptions about the genotype of individual #1's father.

If individual #1's father is not carrying the albino allele, the probability of 1 being heterozygous is 1/2, since we know that 1's mother is a carrier. If individual #1's father is also a carrier, then the probability of 1 being heterozygous increases from 1/2 to 2/3.

The probability of 11 being heterozygous is 1/1 because his mother was albino.

The probability of two heterozygotes producing an albino is 1/4. Thus the probability of 1 and 11 producing an albino ranges from 1/2  $\times$  1/1  $\times$  1/4 = 1/8 to 2/3  $\times$  1/1  $\times$  1/4 = 1/6
