

Chapter 7 - Interest Groups

Interest group – any group that attempts to influence public policy (government laws and regulations)

There are thousands of interest groups in the U.S. Some have hundreds of thousands or even millions of members, while others may have just a few dozen. They are active all over the country, and attempt to influence all levels of government (local, state, and federal). Approximately 2/3 of Americans belong to at least one interest group

Pluralist theory of interest groups – this theory holds that policymaking is a competition among diverse interest groups, and that the interests of all socioeconomic classes are represented, not just the wealthy.

Elite theory of interest groups – this theory holds that most interest groups tend to represent the wealthy, highly educated portion of society. Interest groups mainly serve to promote the interests and concerns of the upper socioeconomic class in the United States.

Functions of interest groups:

1. Educate the public about policy issues
