

Chapter 6 The Muscular System

Because flexing muscles look like mice scurrying beneath the skin, some scientist long ago dubbed them muscles, from the Latin word mus meaning "little mouse." Indeed, the rippling muscles of professional boxers or weight lifters is often the first thing that comes to mind when one hears the word muscle. But muscle is also the dominant tissue in the heart and in the walls of other hollow organs of the body. In all its forms, it makes up nearly half the body's mass.

The essential function of muscle is contraction, or shortening-a unique characteristic that sets it apart from any other body tissue. As a result of this ability, muscles are responsible for essentially all body movement and can be viewed as the "machines" of the body.

Overview of Muscle Tissues

- Describe similarities and differences in the structure and function of the three types of muscle tissue and indicate where they are found in the body.
 - Skeletal – single, very long, cylindrical, multinucleated cells with very obvious striations, voluntary via nervous system controls, attach to bones for movement, slow to fast contractions
 - Cardiac – branching chains of cells, uninucleated, striated, involuntary, found only in the heart, slow rhythmic contractions
 - Smooth – single, fusiform, uninucleated, no striations, involuntary, can stretch, found mostly in walls of hollow visceral organs but not the heart, very slow contraction
- Define muscular system.
 - The function of muscle tissue is to contract or shorten to cause movement, maintain posture, stabilize joints, and generate heat
 - The term muscular system applies specifically to skeletal muscle
- Define and explain the role of the following: endomysium, perimysium, epimysium, tendon, and aponeurosis.
 - Endomysium – delicate connective tissue sheath enclosing muscle fibers
 - Perimysium – coarser fibrous membrane that wraps several sheathed muscle fibers to form a bundle of fibers called a fascicle
 - Epimysium – even tougher overcoat of connective tissue that covers many fascicles bound together to form the muscle
 - Tendon – strong, cords of dense fibrous tissue attaching a muscle indirectly to bones, cartilages, or connective tissue coverings of each other
 - Aponeurosis – sheet-like bundles of fibrous or membranous sheet connecting a muscle and the part it moves

Microscopic Anatomy of Skeletal Muscle

- Describe the microscopic structure of skeletal muscle and explain the role of actin- and myosin-containing myofilaments.
 - See diagram on page 167
 - Sarcolemma – the many oval nuclei of a skeletal muscle cell
 - Myofibrils – the long ribbon-like fibers that fill the cytoplasm – actually chains of tiny contractile units called sarcomeres – the alternating light and dark bands along the length of the aligned myofibrils give the muscle cells its striped appearance
