CHAPTER 8

BASIC COST MANAGEMENT CONCEPTS

Chapter 1 indicated that managerial accounting deals with the information managers need for making decisions and for planning and performance evaluation. From an accounting point of view, this information often relates to the costs of the organization.

Nature of Cost, Cost Pools, Cost Objects and Cost Drivers

Cost

At the most basic level, a cost may be defined as the value foregone or sacrifice of resources for the purpose of achieving some economic benefit which will promote the profit-making ability of the firm. A cost is incurred when a resource is used for some purpose. It is also an outlay or expenditure of money to acquire goods and services that assist in performing operations.

In managerial accounting, the term cost may be used in different ways because there are many types of costs that may be classified differently according to the immediate needs of management. For instance, external financial reports require the use of historical cost data whereas decision making may require current cost data.

Accounting costs are classified in numerous ways. To prepare financial statements, accountants must associate costs with specific time periods. The classification of costs into product and period costs allows accountants to do that. Costs are classified differently depending on the type of organization involved, that is, merchandising, service, or manufacturing.

Cost data that are classified and recorded in a particular way for one purpose may be inappropriate for another use.

Cost Pools

Cost pools are costs collected into meaningful groups. Cost pools may be classified

- (1) by type of cost (labor cost in one pool, materials costs in another)
 - (2) by source (department 1, department 2 and so on)
 - (3) by responsibility (manager 1, manager 2 and so on)
- and many more.
