Biomes and Ecosystems Overview

I forgot. Biodiversity. Okay.

When we talk about biomes, we're talking about major classes of terrestrial systems, terrestrial ecosystem. What do you mean by terrestrial? Land. Land-based.

Okay? So all of the biomes, we'll be talking about community that is in our terrestrial ecosystems, land-based. Biomes are large classes of terrestrial regions or areas in the world.

Take note, biomes that are similar have similarity in terms of climatic conditions. They are also very similar in terms of the soil types present in the area. And they also have similarity in terms of the plant and animal composition. So regardless of where they are in the world, if they are of the same biome, whether it's in the United States or in Europe, they should always have similarity in all of this form. Climate, plant, animal species present in it, and the soil types present.

So, as you can see in this triangle here, or pyramid, you can see the nine different biomes around the globe. The neighboring biomes here have a zone called an ecotone, which is actually a transition zone between two neighboring biomes. And in an ecotone, you can find plant and animal species from the two neighboring biomes.

Even if it's not 100%, the plant and animal species from both of the two neighboring biomes, it may contain some species from both neighboring biomes. For example, you have a grassland here and a chaparral. So the ecotone is somewhere here. So that ecotone can contain species from the grassland as well as the chaparral. So if you look at this map over here, the globe will have the same biome that has similarity in terms again of climate, plant, and animal composition as well as their soil type.

So as you can see, we can see a desert over here and a desert over here in a different country because of their similarities in all of those four factors. So from the north, we can see the tundra. South of the tundra, this one over here is the boreal forest as well as this one over here in Europe and Russia.

So in the Midwestern part of the United States as well as here in Argentina, we can find the temperate grasslands, the southern tip of Australia. Then we also have very big deserts. There
