F. THE GENETIC CODE. Genetic information is present in the structure and organization of the DNA molecule. This hereditary information, known as the genetic code, depends upon the order of the different nucleotides in the DNA molecule. The genetic code is a message to the cell to make certain proteins. The kind of protein to be made is coded in the arrangement of groups of three nucleotide bases called triplet codes. The production of one type of protein is controlled by a sequence (order) of nucleotide triplets. This triplet nucleotide sequence is called a gene. To help understand genetic coding compare the DNA code to the alphabet code.
