LITERATURE REVIEW

2.0 Introduction

A review of literature is a text of scholarly papers, articles which includes the status of knowledge of the research area including substantive findings as well as theoretical and methodological contributions in the study. This review of literature deals with past studies conducted on the subject, to generate understanding in the area, extensive review of literature was carried out by the researcher.

The literature review of this study provides a review on forensic accounting. The chapter begins with the description of different concepts and definitions related to forensic accounting and the theories that support the study. Later, it presents the empirical studies on the forensic accounting. The chapter winds up with the conceptual framework that guided the study.

2.1 Concepts and Definitions

This section provides the conceptual understanding of the key constructs used in this study. These are accounting, forensic accounting and fraud. The discussion on the conceptualization is based on the reviewed literature.

2.1.1 Nature and Meaning of Accounting

Accounting is often called language of business and the function of a language is to facilitate communication among individuals in the society. Accounting is the common language used to communicate financial information from one person to another in the world of industry and commerce. Information given in the language can be useful only to persons who understand that language. Unnibhavi (2005) defines accounting as the process of recording (in the journal), classifying (in the ledger), summarizing (in the trial balance and final accounts), analyzing and interpreting the transaction of financial character and communicating the results thereof to the various parties connected with such information.
