

Northwestern Renaissance Artists

During the late 19th and early 20th centuries, Northwest artists were influenced by the European Impressionist movement. This movement emphasized light and color, and was a reaction against the dark, formal style of the 19th century.

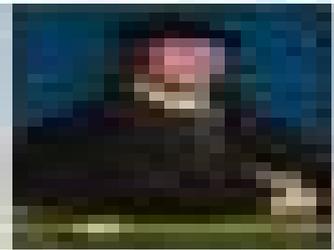

Artists like J.M.W. Turner and the Impressionists were interested in capturing the effects of light and color in their paintings. They used visible brushstrokes and a rich palette of colors. This style was a departure from the traditional academic style of the 19th century.

Northwest artists were also influenced by the Impressionist movement. They used visible brushstrokes and a rich palette of colors. This style was a departure from the traditional academic style of the 19th century.
