

Respiratory System

- trachea - also known as the windpipe, is the main pathway for air to enter or leave the lungs
- bronchi - a tube between the trachea and the lungs that carries air
- lungs - two sets of spongy organs, one in each side of the chest and made up of tiny air sacs
- diaphragm - a muscle that contracts when we breathe in, helping the lungs to expand

The air that we breathe is warmed as it passes through the trachea. The trachea, or windpipe, has folds of tissue known as cartilage along its length. These folds branch out into tubes that we call smaller, called bronchioles. These bronchioles carry air through them where it enters the lungs, allowing the gases entering to reach them.

The oxygen that is taken through the trachea and bronchi travels from the heart to the lungs and is returned for a second journey!

Did you know...?

On average, we breathe in between 17 and 20 litres per minute. The air that we breathe in is slightly cooler than the air that we breathe out. The air that we breathe in is slightly cooler than the air that we breathe out.

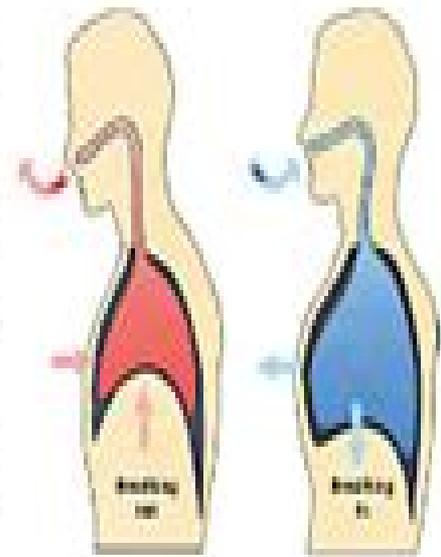

Respiratory System

The purpose of the respiratory system is to move air into the body while letting go of waste gases. It is made up of a collection of organs, muscles and tissues that allow us to breathe.

Inspiration, or the act of breathing in, is something we all do and usually without thinking about it.

When we breathe in air, the diaphragm expands as the lungs inflate and the diaphragm moves down. When we breathe out, the diaphragm gets smaller and the diaphragm moves up.

However, the respiratory system is a very complex system made up of many parts...

- nasal cavity - allows air to be inhaled into the lungs.
- oral cavity - houses the tongue and is used to breathe in oxygen.
- epiglottis - sits at the back of the throat and closes over to stop food and liquid from entering the trachea.
