

Chapter 20 Homework (Answer Key)

1. On Tuesday, price and quantity demanded are $7 and 120 units, respectively. Ten days later, price and quantity demanded are $6 and 150 units, respectively. What is the price elasticity of demand between the price of $7 and the price of $6?

Answer: $E_d = 1.44$.

2. What does a price elasticity of demand of 0.39 mean?
If there is a change in price, quantity demanded will change (in the opposite direction) by 0.39 times the percentage change in price. For example, if price rises 30 percent, then quantity demanded will fall 3.9 percent. If price rises 20 percent, then quantity demanded will fall 7.8 percent.
3. Identify what happens to total revenue as a result of each of the following: (a) price rises and demand is elastic; (b) price falls and demand is inelastic; (c) price rises and demand is unit elastic; (d) price rises and demand is inelastic; (e) price falls and demand is elastic.
- Total revenue falls.
 - Total revenue falls.
 - Total revenue remains constant.
 - Total revenue rises.
 - Total revenue rises.
4. Alexi says, "When a seller raises his price, his total revenue rises." What is Alexi implicitly assuming?
Alexi is implicitly assuming that demand is inelastic. If, however, she is wrong and demand is elastic, then a rise in price will actually lower total revenue.
5. If there are 7 substitutes for good X and demand is inelastic, does it follow that if there are 9 substitutes for good X, demand will be elastic? Explain your answer.
No. Moving from 7 to 9 substitutes doesn't necessarily change demand from being inelastic to elastic. It simply leads to a rise in price elasticity of demand, ceteris paribus. For example, if price elasticity of demand is 0.45 when there are 7 substitutes, it will be higher when there are 9 substitutes, ceteris paribus. Higher could be 0.67. If this is the case, demand is still inelastic (but less so than before).
6. Price elasticity of demand is predicted to be higher for which good of the following combinations of goods: (a) Dell computers or computers; (b) Heinz ketchup or ketchup; (c) Perrier water or water? Explain your answers.
a. Dell computers.
b. Heinz ketchup.
c. Perrier water.
In all three cases, the good with the higher price elasticity of demand is the more specific of the two goods; therefore, it has more substitutes.
7. What does an income elasticity of demand of 1.33 mean?
The good in question is a normal good, and it is income elastic; that is, as income rises, the quantity demanded rises by a greater percentage. In this case, quantity demanded rises by 1.33 times the percentage change in income. If income rises by 10 percent, the quantity demanded of the good will rise by 13.3 percent.
8. What does perfectly inelastic supply signify?
A change in price does not change quantity supplied.
9. Why will government raise more tax revenue if it applies a tax to a good with inelastic demand than if it applies the tax to a good with elastic demand?
Tax revenue is equal to the tax times the quantity sold. If demand is inelastic, there will be a smaller cutback in quantity sold due to the higher price brought about by the tax.
10. Under what condition would a per unit tax placed on the sellers of computers be fully paid by the buyers of computers?
