

CHAPTER ONE: INTERPERSONAL PROCESS

INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION: STUDENT GUIDE

This chapter introduces you to the study of interpersonal communication. It covers the basic concepts, theories, and processes of interpersonal communication and provides a framework for understanding the role of communication in human behavior.

1.1 What is Interpersonal Communication?

Interpersonal communication is the process of exchanging information, ideas, feelings, and attitudes between two or more people. It can occur face-to-face, through written messages, or through electronic media. The process involves both the sender and the receiver, and is influenced by a variety of factors, including the context, the relationship between the communicators, and the nature of the message.

Verbal Communication: Verbal communication involves the use of words to convey a message. It can be spoken or written. Verbal communication is the most common form of interpersonal communication and is used in a wide variety of contexts, from casual conversation to formal presentations.

Nonverbal Communication: Nonverbal communication involves the use of body language, facial expressions, and other cues to convey a message. It is often used in conjunction with verbal communication and can be just as powerful. Nonverbal communication is used in a wide variety of contexts, from casual conversation to formal presentations.

Written Communication: Written communication involves the use of written words to convey a message. It can be formal or informal. Written communication is used in a wide variety of contexts, from casual letters to formal reports. It is often used to convey information that is important or needs to be documented.

Electronic Communication: Electronic communication involves the use of electronic devices to convey a message. It can be synchronous or asynchronous. Electronic communication is used in a wide variety of contexts, from casual text messages to formal video conferences.

1.2 The Communication Process

The communication process is the sequence of events that occurs when a message is sent from one person to another. It involves the sender, the message, the channel, the receiver, and the feedback. The process is influenced by a variety of factors, including the context, the relationship between the communicators, and the nature of the message.

Sender: The sender is the person who initiates the communication process. They are responsible for encoding the message and sending it through the channel.

Receiver: The receiver is the person who receives the message. They are responsible for decoding the message and providing feedback to the sender.
