present a pamphlet, "Meditation Training," to each of the participants at the beginning of the first session. This document offers a general context for the meditation training, as well as a few passages that set an appropriate level of connection to the ancient origins of meditation:

A monk goes into the forest or to the foot of a tree or to an uninhabited place and sits with his legs crossed, and with his body erect he generates mindfulness and being mindful he breathes in and being mindful he breathes out. As he breathes in a long breath he recognizes that he is breathing in a long breath; as he breathes out a long breath, he recognizes that he is breathing out a long breath (Sangupta, 1923, p. 42).

The primary focus of the booklet, however, is to provide a concise introduction to the various methods that will be used in their training. [section continues]
