Neurons, Synapses, and Signaling

KEY CONCEPTS

- 48.1 Neuron structure and organization reflect function in information transfer
- 48.2 Ion pumps and ion channels establish the resting potential of a neuron
- 48.3 Action potentials are the signals conducted by axons
- 48.4 Neurons communicate with other cells at synapses

▲ Ribbon model of one example of a toxic peptide from cone snail venom

Lines of Communication

The tropical cone snail (Conus geographus) in Figure 48.1 is small and slow-moving, yet it is a dangerous hunter. A carnivore, this marine snail hunts, kills, and dines on fish. Injecting venom with a hollow, harpoon-like tooth, the cone snail paralyzes its free-swimming prey in seconds. The venom is so deadly that unlucky scuba divers have died from just a single injection. What makes cone snail venom so fast acting and lethal? The answer is its mixture of toxin molecules, each with a specific mechanism of disabling neurons, the nerve cells that transfer information within the body. Because the venom almost instantaneously disrupts neuronal control of locomotion and respiration, an animal attacked by the cone snail cannot escape, defend itself, or otherwise survive.

Communication by neurons largely consists of long-distance electrical signals and short-distance chemical signals. The specialized structure of neurons allows them to use pulses of electrical current to receive, transmit, and regulate the flow of information over long distances within the body. In transferring information from one cell to another, neurons often rely on chemical signals that act over very short distances. The mixture of molecules in a cone snail's venom is particularly potent because it interferes with both electrical and chemical signaling by neurons.

All neurons transmit electrical signals within the cell in an identical manner. Thus a neuron transmitting sensory input encodes information in the same way
