

Job 9Title: Standard Electrical Symbols

There are a few codes of practices and Singapore Standards that standardize the use of electrical symbols for computer-aided design. There are as listed below:

- SS 202 : Part 7 and 8 : 1999, and
- CP 83 : Part 2 : 2000.

The code and standards recommends a common set of symbols to be used by all parties in the building industry in the preparation of drawings. This will eventually:

- provide a standard set of 2D graphical symbols to represent entities of building components for the building industry,
- facilitate common understanding and interpretation of information in drawings by different users of building industry, and
- facilitate easy and efficient exchange of information.
