family unit around the hearth of a dinner table
 allowing each family member to have a voice and tell their story suffering and human experience (inspired by European history)
 the dynamic/relationship between each family member how each family member reacts to an unseen but ever present outside force to be politically aware- exploring the effects of this suffering on human life
 deprivations, poverty – a dark semi narrative

TUNES

The costumes were by the family before the start of the 1940s era, suggesting to the audience the work is set in a historical context as these were the clothes to be politically aware of the events within European history.

The costume colours are muted and dark, conveying a sense of deprivation and poverty.

The costumes are clearly utilitarian as these explore the individual family members in the work. The designer uses a simple, dark, muted palette to convey the political context of the work, suggesting the family's suffering and poverty.

The mother wears a simple dress with a high collar to show her age and maturity. The son, perhaps as he has been affected by the war, wears a simple, dark, utilitarian suit. The father, who is a soldier, wears a simple, dark, utilitarian suit. The designer uses a simple, dark, muted palette to convey the political context of the work, suggesting the family's suffering and poverty.

As the work of the work, the designer put on simple, dark, utilitarian. The suggestion to the audience that they are living the reality of their home and world in a historical context of human and historical. We know they are about to face the political outside force. The children's eyes and faces are illuminated, which was again, a nod to the deprivation and poverty the family face.

PERFORMANCE ENVIRONMENT

The setting was a minimal set in a Black Box Theatre. The bare walls and floor help to emphasize the themes of deprivation and poverty experienced by the family.

This creates an intimate and enclosed space on stage. It suggests that the family home is small, and perhaps they are hiding from the outside world. The design helps the audience to emotionally connect to each family member, as they are placed with the family in the heart of their home, a sheltered space perhaps.

The props used throughout include a table, bench and some stools. The design is simple and utilitarian to convey the sense of hardship. They are consistent with the 1940s era in a European style that encourages the audience to place what they see in a political context, perhaps imagining the family in a wartime scenario.

At the end of the piece, the designers take advantage of additional props from an old-fashioned wooden coal stand. These objects are in a 1940s-1950s style which reflects

They are also significant to the choreographic intention of the piece.

There are no wings in the piece, the designers remain on stage throughout the work on stage. This supports the narrative that
