Chapter 3

Exercise 3.1 Diffusion experiment

a

Dish	Temperature / °C	Distance red colour diffused into jelly / mm
		Hole 1	Hole 2	Hole 3	Hole 4	Mean (average)
A	10	2	3	2	3	3
B	20	5	5	6	4	5
C	40	9	11	8	10	10
D	80	19	21	18	23	20

- b Yes. As temperature increased, the distance the red colour diffused through the jelly increased. As the dishes were all left for the same period of time, this must mean the colour was moving faster in the warmer dishes. A doubling of the temperature caused the distance diffused by the colour to roughly double.
- c The four most important variables to be controlled are: concentration of the solution of red pigment; size of hole in the jelly; depth of jelly in the dish; volume of solution placed in the hole.
- d This allowed for a mean to be calculated. It improves the reliability of the results.
- e Measurement of the distance diffused, because the 'edge' between the colour and the uncoloured jelly will not be very distinct. Some dye may have got into the jelly before the dishes are transferred to their final temperatures (especially as they were carried). Time taken for the dye and jelly in each dish to reach their final temperature – the dye won't have been at the correct temperature for the entire duration of the experiment.

Exercise 3.2 How plants take up water

a cell wall, large vacuole

Label line to the cell surface membrane, or to the membrane around the vacuole.

c Water molecules move randomly. There is a greater concentration of them outside the cell than inside, so more will (by chance) move into the cell than out of it, through the partially permeable cell surface membrane. The solutes in the cell cannot get out through the partially permeable membrane. (Some students may answer in terms of water potential. The water potential of the solution outside the cell is higher than that inside, so water moves down its water potential gradient.)

d This provides a large surface area, so more water can pass across the surface at any one time.
