

From the mice sharing the skins of moose, the circumnavigator man and dog. Humans and dogs have lived together 30,000 years, and despite the many changes to our planet require and cross scientific species the bond of devotion and loyalty and love remains unchanged.

For those of us who raise and love bird dogs, the bond is especially profound and devoted. The precision of bird hunting is surely unmatched in this Anthropocene era, but our desire to hunt and the excitement of the hunt are deeply ingrained in both our instincts and inner genes. In the same performance of hunting skills that brought us together three million thousands of years ago man and dog recognize their true home but carefully photographed rather in pursuit of the bird. Whether man uses a shotgun instead of a net and the modern bird dog may hold point longer and more steadily, but the territory of our exhilaration were impossible the same closeness and familiarity. We are a team. We have crossed the trials of thousands of years of willing civilization. We are forever, together.

In Coot Dogs I share stories about bird dogs and the joys and occasional frustrations we have known. I offer this collection of short stories, essays, and poems as a response to the love of companionship my dogs have granted me. I am so fortunate, so very fortunate, that the comment has been part of my life.
