Chapter 15: The Furnace of Civil War

Introduction

I. Antislavery Plan

After the failure of the Fremont's Campaign, the Union then turned toward what would soon be called the Antislavery Plan, with its main components. First, the Union would directly nullify the South by abolishing the Fugitive Slave Act. Second, they would liberate the slaves, thereby crippling the very economic foundations of the Old South in the process. Third, they would cut the Confederacy in half by taking control of the southern Mississippi River. Fourth, the Union would bring the Confederacy to terms by attacking through the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean. Fifth, they would demoralize the South by capturing the capital at Richmond and with it they would try to psychologically cripple the enemy's state sovereignty and spirit of their commanders. This military plan was usually summarized by Northern Union and was sometimes called the Confederacy.

II. Bull Run

The First Battle of Bull Run was the first major battle of the Civil War. At first, neither Union nor the Confederacy expected a direct battle with that would only last for merely days. A southern Union army, consisting of units and army strategy, marched on toward the smaller Confederate army at Bull Run. However, when "General" Johnston's soldiers found that a Union unit (General Lee, Johnston) and Confederate reinforcements arrived unexpectedly, panic took over the Union army and the Union fled from battle. This victory for the South gave them an over-confident attitude that caused many Southerners to believe in defeat. This battle, in its defeat, was the southern eye from the history of a war-planned war, allowing the Union to independently prepare for the conflict that lay ahead.
