

Oracle 10g Datafile I/O Statistics

Mike Ault, Harry Conway and Don Burleson

The Oracle10g database significantly improves the I/O subsystem through the addition of such features as the Automatic Storage Management (ASM) facility. However, it is important to constantly monitor the I/O workload on the database because in a well tuned application, I/O remains a bound factor that can cause significant wait times in data access. I/O layout design is a complex process and includes the consideration of the following points:

- Sufficient disk capacity for business needs.
- Appropriate data protection level using RAID levels, hardware, LVM, etc.
- Sufficient I/O throughput that does not exceed disk I/O bandwidth.

The AWR has several views that can be used to isolate datafile I/O related statistics as well as tablespace space usage statistics.

The dba_hist_filestatxs and dba_hist_tempstatxs views display information about I/O activity for data and temporary database files, respectively:
